BRIEF SYNOPSIS

Victor Hugo Halperin's

✓ WHEN A GIRL LOVES. ✓

Sasha Boroff (Agnes Ayres), believing that her sweetheart, Count Michael (Percy Marmont), formerly favorite singer to the Czar, is dead, leaves Russia with her family for America. Here, as a nurse, she marries for her family's sake Dr. Godfrey Luke (Robert McKim), a wealthy surgeon-- after she has discovered that her Michael is alive in New York, the world's greatest baritone-- and is married to another (Kathlyn Williams).

Miserable, feeling dishonored for having sold herself, Sasha attempts suicide-- but is prevented by the appearance of Helen, Michael's wife, who begs protection from the police. Sasha protects her, learning that there had been a raid on a notorious roadhouse-- where Helen had been with her paramour, Dr. Luke-- and had escaped.

Michael discovers Helen in Luke's home. There is a duel in which Michael, broken-hearted, throws away his gun-- just as Sasha, whom he had believed dead, appears-- and receives Luke's bullet intended for Michael. Michael loses his voice.

Recovering from her injury, Sasha nurses Michael who is dying-- result of the strain on an old throat wound ~~previously~~ received in Russia. Grishka, a hunchback waif (John George) befriended by Sasha in Russia and in America, in gratitude perfects a scientific cure for disease-- "radio-vibration"-- with which he hopes to save Michael for Sasha.

But meanwhile, Sasha promises to return to Luke if he will operate on Michael-- which he does, intending to kill him. Grishka arrives in time to stop him, persuading Sasha to allow him to apply his discovery. But Luke's hate vibrations interfere. Michael appears to have died. Grishka strikes Luke unconscious, and talking to his subconscious mind, drives the hate out of him. Grief-stricken, Sasha becomes unbalanced;-- but she is happily restored when Grishka, now ~~unhindered~~ unhampered by Luke, successfully cures Michael. Luke gives up Sasha, leaving the lovers together at last.
